Why civil service reforms fail? - A case of Nepal.

p.40-63.

A number of civil service reform commissions have been constituted and recommendations made for strengthening Nepal civil service. Despite five decades of experiments with democratic practices, the behaviour and mind-set of politicians and bureaucrats have not changed significantly to introduce civil service reforms on a result-oriented basis. The success of any civil service reform hinges on the political as well as bureaucratic will be commitment, and the utilization of reform in context is crucial for its success. This paper explores the main reasons why civil service reform in Nepal fails and suggests creating preconditions for its own success.

Our investigation of the Senate politics of four major civil rights acts indicates that they did not result from winning coalitions bulldozing helpless minorities, nor did they result from some unpredictable chaotic process. These critical bills were the result of a flexible, multidimensional coalition-building process that proceeded by offering amendments carefully constructed to split off pivotal members of the winning coalition. Ideal point estimates of US senators reveal that this coalitional negotiation process led to outcomes at some distance from the first choice of the winning coalition, testimony to significant compromise, both in early proposals and in refinements. This negotiation process resulted in outcomes apparently constrained by the boundaries of the uncovered set (McKelvey 1986; Miller 1980). "Closing the deal" in the US Senate meant finding an outcome that could withstand robust attacks on pivotal coalition members - and that meant finding an outcome in the uncovered set. - Reproduced.

CIVIL SERVICE

Ethics in Nepalese civil services sector: how does it.
Administration and Management Review, 21(2), 2009(Aug):
p.88-107.

The objective of this paper is to highlight moral crises arising out of its fast devaluation that has affected almost every section of the society including bureaucracy. Nepalese civil services sector has increasingly become dysfunctional, fragmented, poorly organized, and incapable of performing at a level acceptable to the public. In recent years, Nepalese civil service has become too much politicized which has contributed to the promotion of unethical practices in civil service. As a result, moral & ethical values in civil services are in the state of deterioration, causing services delivery to suffer. Genuine concerns of law-biding citizens are consistently ignored, rules and regulations are constantly by-passed, ethics and morality have become a thing of past. Civil servants and higher government officers were unable to create an impression among the public that they are there to serve. A rapid deterioration in their ethics has made it difficult to generate in them the feeling of serving the public interest, demonstrating personal integrity, promoting ethnical work environment, and striving for professional excellence. The author argues that to address this situation, what is needed is a civil service characterized by honesty, knowledge, skills, better performance and above all one that respects ethical value. It is necessary to restore the feelings that to be a member of bureaucracy is an honor and that it must continue to do all that is needed to help promote this image. He maintains that ethnical issues in Nepalese civil services are and will remain important for improving service delivery. - Reproduced.

The article discusses the place of anti-corruption in the post-war donor agendas. It uses examples from a set of country reports to demonstrate the divergence between the rhetoric and reality of donor-led initiatives, and the delivery of reform through the governance approach of which addressing corruption has been a part. It suggests that dealing with corruption has often been diluted or downplayed within the wider approach. Within the debate to revise that approach, corruption may be relegated further down the agenda. While recognising the complexity of the post-war reform process, and the demands from the multiple tasks and volume of funding being addressed by a range of domestic and external actors, the article suggests that failure to address corruption within any new approach in favour of what are considered more pressing reform issues may well cause problems for the future. - Reproduced.

The concept of mentoring has been followed in our country from time immemorial. Given the cut throat competition that characterizes today's environment and the stressful life one leads today, especially the younger generation, this concept is still relevant and works well even today. This Paper sees the origin of concept, reasons for the renewed thrust and in the process examines the various types, benefits on mentoring process apart from suggesting few steps for making it effective and successful as it is all the more relevant in the context of today's modern competitive environment. - Reproduced.

The status of international law and transnational legal agreements with respect to the sovereignty claims of liberal democracies has become a highly contentious theoretical and political issue. Although recent European discussions focus on global constitutionalism, there is increasing reticence on the part of many that prospects of a world constitution are neither desirable nor salutary. This article more closely considers criticisms of these legal transformations by distinguishing the nationalist from democratic sovereigntist positions, and both, from diagnoses that see the universalization of human rights norms either as the Trojan horse of a global empire or as neocolonialist intentions to assert imperial control over the world. These critics ignore "the jurisgenerativity of law." Although democratic sovereigntists are wrong in minimizing how human rights norms improve democratic self-rule; global constitutionalists are also wrong in minimizing the extent to which cosmopolitan norms require local contextualization, interpretation, and vernacularization by self-governing peoples. - Reproduced.

South African local government has undergone radical transformation. The reform process included a local government financial management best-practice technical assistance programme (MEMTAP) targeting financial management and especially budget quality reform. Dollery and Graves (2009) earlier examined the efficacy of the South African National Treasury (NT's) municipal budget funding compliance technique for measuring adherence to the Municipal Finance Management Act's (MFMA) budget funding requirements using a single metropolitan municipality case study. This article further evaluates the robustness and validity of the funding compliance instrument as a reform performance measurement tool by comparing the results of four geographically and demographically different municipalities. Also introduced is a performance 'trend' instrument similar to a 'Likert scale' for comparing municipal performance. Optimal tax revenue theory is invoked to examine this key revenue variable for producing a complaint budget. The article finds the 'budget funding' reform component of the Best-Practice Technical Assistance (BPTA) programme presently ineffective and unsustainable. - Reproduced.

Telangana: righting historical wrongs or getting the future right?
Economic and Political Weekly, 45(4), 2010(23 Jan):
p.33-38.

The Telangana movement centred on a cultural identity may indeed succeed in winning statehood. Yet, identifying and redressing the grievances of Telangana is a twofold challenge: countering crisis-ridden state cultures of neoliberal populism and harnessing the global city region of Hyderabad towards more equitable development. Historicist narratives of grievance and injury obscure the more recent roots of the Telangana movement, to be found in the anger against the dystopia of competitive populist politics in post-reform Andhra Pradesh, which has also produced new geographies of accumulation, injustice and exclusion in the last 20 years. This remains to be acknowledged. - Reproduced.

Trends in urban poverty under economic reforms: 1993-94 to 2004-05. Economic and Political Weekly, 45(4), 2010(23 Jan): p.42-53.

Urban poverty, when directly measured by counting the persons unable to access the official nutrition norm of 2,100 calories through their total monthly spending on all goods and services, declined between 1983 and 1993-94, but rose substantially between 1993-94 and 2004-05 while poverty depth has increased. This is particularly evident in the states with the conurbations of Delhi, Mumbai, Chennai and Kolkata, while states with smaller urban centres have fared better. This paper presents the estimates for urban areas at the all-India level and the individual states. The official method has been underestimating actually existing urban poverty in the same manner that rural poverty has been underestimated. The energy intake accessible at the all-India official urban poverty line has fallen to 1,795, but in many states it is below 1,450 calories at the state-specific official poverty lines. The data also record a small decline in average protein intake and a small rise in fat intake per capita over the same period. - Reproduced.

Simulation is said to be the representation of the essential characteristics of a system, by means of a simpler one in particular the representation of the physical phenomenon by computer or by other equipment for example aircraft training simulator. In the cases where special manual and reflect skills are not involved and the learning involves more of mental and logical inputs then the technique of simulation is slightly modified. The present students are made to use the power of their subconscious minds and to experience what is to be taught. The study was carried out at Institute of Hotel Management Bhopal on 120 students. Similar topic was taught to two different sections using two different training methods. Simulation and conventional classroom black board technique was used. The effect of the two methods was evaluated by a written test. A feedback form was also given to all students at the end of the week. The study revealed that simulation is interesting and effective technique that should be used in the training.

An efficient and effective administrative machinery is a sine quo non for any economic development programme. Staff training is the obvious means to fulfill such a need. The main aim of this paper, as we perceive it, is to present a picture of a National level Training Institution like the Nepal Administrative Staff College (NASC) and relate it to public and non-public organizations which consume its services and development opportunities. This paper is split into three main parts, first, Introduction to NASC, second, General Staff Training and finally, Trainer Development. It makes an attempt to generate and promote ideas concerned with the concept, processes, and methods of training and administration. - Reproduced.

Configurations of gender inequality: the consequences of

p.693-719.

This paper gathers a wide range of indicators into distinctive profiles to show how configurations of gender economic inequality are shaped by both welfare state strategies and gender role ideologies. When multiple aspects of gender inequality are assembled together, it becomes evident that all societies exhibit both gender-egalitarian and inegalitarian features. These tradeoffs can best be understood through the ideological and institutional contexts in which they are embedded. Empirical illustrations are provided for fourteen advanced societies by analysing the major expressions of gender inequality; from women's economic wellbeing and financial autonomy, through labour force participation and continuity of employment, to occupational attainments and economic rewards. The analysis confirms the existence of distinctive profiles of gender inequality and their affinity to normative conceptions of the gender order and ideal types of welfare state institutions. -
