Governance is that separate process or certain part of management or leadership processes that makes decisions that define expectations, grant power or verify performance. In a developing country like India, governance concerns necessarily have a wider ambit. The recognition that it takes place in domains other than that of exclusively formal institutionalised political and administrative structures means that governance concerns encompass a variety of spheres. The Government of India has paid special attention to governance reforms. The agenda of reforms has been clearly stated in the recent official documents and reports of the government, governance issue is at the forefront of the development agenda and state, 'good governance' is one of the most crucial factors for development. - Reproduced.

There has been a neglect of state institutions and decisions by the executive are taken not under consultation with the assembly but as decreed by a new religious math-temple-resort complex that has come to wield power and influence. Democratic processes have been sidelined and people's movements have been corrupted. The uneven growth of the state economy that has accompanied these processes holds out the danger of Karnataka becoming a land of deep inhumanity. - Reproduced.

HUMAN DEVELOPMENT

State of Human Development in India.
Indian Journal of Public Administration, 57(2), 2011(Apr-Jun): p.282-306.

The enduring relevance of growth and progress of a society for addressing present and failure challenges can best be assessed through human development approach. More than half a century of planned development and an accelerated GDP growth in India has not been accompanied by a commensurate increase in the employment, eradication of poverty, disparities and deprivation. There has been a steady growth in the population but a lot is still left to be desired on ensuring health care and education for masses. In order to evaluate the state of human development in the country this article tries to assess the three basic parameters of human development, i.e., economic attainment or well being, education and health, in some detail. - Reproduced.

Human rights are universal, inalienable and sacred. They are necessary to protect the freedom, liberty and dignity of the person and to develop, mental, moral and spiritual values. In other words, human rights are essential for fullest development of the personality of human beings. Therefore, they must be protected, enriched, developed and be made available to all individuals. This article gives an overview of universalisation of human rights and fundamental freedoms. An attempt has been made to study the concept of human rights and fundamental freedoms provided in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, 1948, International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 1966 and International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 1966. It has also been discussed that how far and to what extent the philosophy of human rights and fundamental freedoms under the Constitution of India has been worked upon by way of different propositions. - Reproduced.

For the first time since the creation of the Indian Council of Social Science Research in the 1970s, the Government of India set up, in 2010, a committee to review the functioning of the council. The four articles in this special section, three of them by directors of ICSSR institutes, discuss different aspects of the report of the committee. The first article commends the quality of analysis and the recommendation to correct the current niggardly government financing of the ICSSR but asks why there has been no discussion of the quality of research and accountability in the social science institutes. - Reproduced.

Suboptimal funding cannot but affect the quality of research, but will more funding, as recommended by the review committee, by itself make a qualitative difference to the quality of output? What is it in institutions that fosters original research? The answer requires conceptual and historical investigations into institutional citizenship, research cultures, and the role of the State in fostering them. - Reproduced.

A crucial test of whether "management matters" is whether changes in the team at the top of an organization make a difference. Focusing on turnover in the collective senior team rather than successions of individual chief executives, this article argues that the impact of leadership succession is contingent upon prior organizational performance. The evidence on English local government shows that changes in the top management team lead to improvements when initial performance is bad, but result in deterioration when initial performance is good. The results support the view that high-performing organizations should attempt to retain members of their senior management team, whereas low performers should seek to replace them. - Reproduced.

Feminist perspective of public administration.

Indian Journal of Public Administration, 57(2), 2011(Apr-Jun): p.143-153.

In order to develop a feminist approach to public administration it is important to recognise that for many decades the discipline, like so many other sciences and social sciences was rooted in an ostensibly neutral but overly male, upper class, white mentality. Like so many other sciences and social sciences undergoing revision today, public administration too has come to be redefined in the light of feminist and other marginalised group's explorations of the subject, resulting in an expansion of its boundaries and a reassessment of its norms. -

One-way, two-way, or dead-end street: British influence on the study of Public administration in America since 1945.

Public Administration Review, 71(4), 2011(Jul-Aug):
p.559-571.

What intellectual influence, if any, have British public administration scholars had on their American counterparts since World War II? In this article, the author briefly reviews the major areas of theory and research in the British study of public administration, further identifying important contributions by British scholars in the areas of modernist-empiricism, the new public management, regulation, policy networks and governance, and interpretive theory. Although there is a discernible American influence on British public administration, there is little British impact on U.S. public administration; nowadays it is a one-way street. Increasingly, British scholars are involved in a growing community of public administration scholars with whom they share active, two-way connections. Recent European developments suggest that American and European public administration academics are growing further apart. Due to the immense strength of modernist-empiricism throughout American universities, plus the interpretive turn to a European epistemology of "blurred genres," these twin, traditionally self-referential, communities seem to be parting company with an attendant danger that future intellectual engagement may be a dead end. - Reproduced.

Building societal harmony requires effective public administration that depends on inclusion of people in decision-making systems that ensure transparency and accountability for outcomes. Citizen participation is sine qua non for effective governance and instrumental for societal harmony. The article seeks to find out role and impact of select administrative programmes, Janmabhoomi, Joint Forest Management, PRI interventions, etc. Objectives of the article are: 1) to examine institutional framework for citizen participation and whether it has benefited, 2) to assess the factors that will stimulate citizen participation 3) to find out impact of citizen participation modules and developmental finances in creating harmonious society. - Reproduced.

Provision of adequate health care facilities for the people is an essential obligation upon the government in a welfare state like India. The Apex court has also held that the right to live with human dignity is enshrined in the Article 21 of the constitution, which derives its life and breath from the Directive Principles of State Policy particularly Article 39 (e) & (f) and 41 and 42 and would therefore include protection of health as envisaged in the directives. This connotation of right to life is wholly justified, for, without health of a person being protected and his well-being looked after, it would be impossible for him to enjoy other fundamental rights. From time to time courts have provided redressal by a meaningful and just interpretation and the right to life and commanding enforcement of the duties of a welfare state. - Reproduced.

As per the 29 items of the Eleventh Schedule of the Constitution, three functions i.e. functions, functionaries and funds have to be devolved on the Panchayati Raj Institutions for planning and implementation of schemes pertaining to a particular sector. But Centrally Sponsored Schemes implemented by other Central Ministries, often ignore the involvement of PRIs. In case the role is identified, it is either non-existent or minimal. Although 73rd Amendment was not a component of structural reform but the attempt to decentralize allocative decisions with the change in the development strategy should be more open and market friendly economic regime. - Reproduced.

Indian Journal of Public Administration, 57(2), 2011(Apr-

Despite property tax being a major source of internal revenue to the urban local bodies (ULB's) in India, it is not being properly managed and exploited optimally. Mobilisation of this resource has remained far from its actual potential. The 13th Finance Commission estimated that the cities can mobilize anywhere between Rs.22,000 to Rs.32,000 crore annually from the present Rs.6,274 crore to Rs.9,424 crore with improved coverage and collection efficiency. To facilitate this, it recommended constitution of a state property tax board, on the lines of West Bengal Valuation Board, which has been functioning for over a quarter century. This is one of the nine mandatory recommendations whose compliance is a pre-condition to access the performance grant of about Rs.8,000 crore it recommended to ULB's. The authors in this article examine the legal framework, Board's composition, functions, staffing, property valuation process, etc. The authors critically examine the Board's composition, functions, staffing, property valuation process, etc. The authors critically examine the Board's organisation and working and draw a few lessons which can be taken into consideration by the state governments which have either constituted or are in the process of
